Mr. Chairman,
Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am speaking on behalf of the Republic of Serbia, the successor state of the state union of Serbia and Montenegro.

I express my satisfaction over the election of the Human Rights Council. I congratulate all the members. In particular, I congratulate Ambassador Luis Alfonso de Alba on his election as Chairman of the Council.

I express my gratitude to the former Commission, as well as to the High Commissioner, Mme Louise Arbour, for the sincere efforts she invested in making our world a better place to live in.

Unfortunately, we are still very far from the projected ideal of liberty, brotherhood and equality for all people irrespective of faith, nation, race, ideology or any other belonging. Because of non-liberty, discrimination, hatred, terrorism and the diktat of the stronger and the richer, hundreds of millions of people suffer and perish in the world today.

It was exactly because of the gross violations of the human rights guaranteed by the Charter of the United Nations that the Secretary-General of the United Nations, Mr. Kofi Annan, was prompted to propose, and the General Assembly of the United Nations to accept, that the Human Rights Council be invested with considerably greater powers than the former Commission and become a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly itself.

More than 1 000 Serbs have been killed, including many children. About 40 000 Serbian homes and 150 centuries-old churches and monasteries have been destroyed. There is no doubt that Kosovo is an infernal place nowadays for all those who are not Albanian, as well as an infernal place for many who are Albanian.

Perhaps because, as United Nations ombudsman for Kosovo, he was honest witness to the truth of this human rights inferno, Mr. Marek Nowicki was replaced without an explanation last year with a tragic message to the Serbs, and not only the Serbs, that the great and mighty world, its mouth full of human rights, is turning its head away of their plight.

Ambassador Kai Eide, United Nations Secretary-General's Special Envoy for the implementation of democratic standards in Kosovo, arrived at the same gloomy conclusions. He reported to the Secretary-General, Security
